LOST BROTHERS ARE LOCATED.

Washington Man Helped a Monessen Boy Find His Missing Relatives.

Edware Ashbrook, of Jefferson avenue Washington Pa. was a business caller in Monessen recently and while here was approached by a young man abont 21 years of age Who made inquiry concerning two of his brothers who were supposed to be in Washington. The young man's name was Saddler and the boys names of whom he was in search were John and Hanson Saddler. The three boys were taken from the Children's home nearly 15 years ago while Mr. Ross was superintendent, and the boys being seperated, nothing had been heard of the two younger boys since that time. The two younger boys were teken from the home by James Dolan, of Washington Pa. Mr Ashbrook, becoming somewhat interested in the pathetic story of the young lad, returned to Washington and endeavered to locate Mr. Dolan who used to be a resident of Washington, Upon investigation it was found he had moved there. Mr. Ashbrook not giving up his efforts succeded in locating the man at Syracuse, N. Y., where he had moved several years ago and took the boys with him. He also learned that both boys were still with Mr. Dolan and were doing well.

Mr. Saddler, who has been searching for his missing brothers untiringly for the past three months is employed with Gaymann & Noles, water well drillers, of Monessen, and was notified yesterday of his brothers' whereabouts.

OUTLOOK IS GOOD.

Racing Men Very Much Pleased With Prospects.

The Stewards of the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Ohio Valley trotting circuit held a meeting recently in Pittsburg at the Colonial hotel, electing the old officers for 1906, John E. Collins of Monongahela, president and Dr. J. E Mitinger of Greensburg, secretary and treasurer. All present at the meeting, which was a very enthusiastic one, express their opinion that the prospects are bright for a good year of light harness running. After a discussion of racing in general, the meeting was adjourned, but will reconvene at Pittsburg Feb. 15, when the full schedule will be completed.

New Bridge Started.

The first step toward actual construction of the new bridge which is to span the Monongahela river between Charleroi and Monessen has been taken and carloads of material are on the way over both the P. R. R. and P. & L. E. lines. The Construction Co. have established an office in North Charleroi and expect to rush the work, which has been delayed on account of the weather, as much as possible. Supt. Friday, who has charge of the masonry work, states that the corps of mechanics who are on the scene, will start work as soon as the weather is favorable.

New Drug Store.

Mr. Ray Litzinger of Chicora, Butler Co., will open about the first of the week to the Monessen people, one of the finest, best equipped drug stores in the Monongahela valley. Mr. Litzinger comes to Monessen highly recommended, having operated a drug store at Chicora for the past few years. His wide experience and thorough knowledge of the business bids fair to secure for him at least a share of the Monessen patronage.

Herbert Cristler has resigned his position at the American Tin Plate Co. and has left for Clarksburg, W. Va., where he has accepted the position of paymaster at the Tin mill there.

WEBSTER NOTES.

C. L. Dea Ver of West Newton, was seen here Monday

Quite a number of our town people were in Monessen today on business.

J. G. Brown of West Newton, attended the funeral of his brother here Monday.

Many new residences have been built up the hollow during the last year, and many more contemplated.

Webster is to have its bridge at last. It was rumored on the street that work would be started by the first of April.

At the Monessen opera house tonight, "Neighborly Neighbors." Come and see a good show and have a hearty laugh

The proposed new three-story hotel opposite the station, is an assured fact as soon as ground is broken for the new bridge.

The weather the past few weeks has been fine for the loafers and some of them have been roosting pretty high the past few nights.

"Buster Brown" at the Monessen opera house Friday, afternoon at 3 o'clock and evening at 8:15. Let every body come and spend a few hours in enjoyment.

Webster's principal industry, the coal works up the hollow, is running to its fullest capacity. These mines scarcely ever lose any time and furnish employment to a large number of men.

Public Pump Nearly Paid For.

The ladies of the W. C. T. U. are doing unusually well in paying for the public pump which they had placed on Fifth street last summer. The proceeds of the silver medal contest, held last week in Kelly's hall, was turned over to this fund and now the ladies have only $25 remaining to pay, so if at any future time they need your help and co-operation, remember you are helping a good cause.

To Meet With Viewers.

The merchants of Monessen are heartily in accord with the opening of a road through the country district and a committee consisting of Messrs. Ammon, Warman, Brumberg, Jones and Musick has been appointed to meet with the viewers this afternoon and try to secure a good road. The meeting will be held in the borough engineer's office.

Neighborly Neighbors.

Tonight at the Monessen opera house will appear Mr. Tom Waters in the new musical mixture "Neighborly Neighbors" This is a good play and guarantee to give satisfaction.

A gentleman expressed himself in the Washington Observer that "as birds can fly" "why can't I?" Probably he can be induced to come to Monessen and teach us how, which will save the expense of the new bridge. Of course he is an inventor.

"BUSTER BROWN"

Melville B. Raymond's Cartoon Comedy, Buster Brown, with chorus, ballet and handsome settings, will be the attraction at the Monessen opera house Friday Feb. 3. The title is so wildly known that almost every one will recognize the fact that it is a play founded on the adventure of that funny little fellow with the innocent look and the infinate capacity for mischief that Richard F Outcaut has made known in the pages of the New York Herald. The enterprising manager, Mr. Raymond, has required the sole rights to Buster including the members of his family and his dog Tige They have all been incorporated into a very amusing farce with music that has proven equeally attractive to audiences of all ages There is a bevy of girls who have been garbed in the latest and most luxuriant style, Buster is an appealing little fellow and with his dog Tige, is the moving spirit of a vast number of humorous complications and side splitting adventures. The chorus is large and the snow girls exceedingly pretty.

(BUSTER BROWN.)

Stonewall Jackson's Looks.

Stonewall Jackson's form was far grand and angular. His feet and hands were large, and his walk was singularly ungraceful. He always spoke quickly, in short sentences devoid of ornament, but to the point. A habit of "flatting" his eyes added no little to the peculiarity of his appearance. His eyes were gray and ordinarily dull and expressionless, but when excited by drill, which always seemed to rouse him, especially when charges were fired, the whole man would change as if he were transported by the roar of the guns to the exciting scene of an actual field of battle.—Thomas M Semmes in Century.

The World and a Living.

It is an old cry that the world owes every man a living. This is a favorite argument with the lazy and shiftless. But the world owes none such a living. If a man will not work he shall not eat is a mandate as old as the race itself. But there is another fundamental sense in which the maxim that the world owes every man a living is profoundly true. It owes every man a fair chance to earn a decent living. And that is all that any self respecting man asks or wants.—Boston Post.

Shattering Her Hopes.

Mr. Close—About how much does an automobile outfit for a woman cost? Mrs. Close (excitedly)—Oh, George, you are not going to buy an automobile, are you? Mr. Close—I should say not! I'm merely trying to figure out how far beyond his income that man Brassey is living.—Brooklyn Life.

Double Loss.

"I hear you lost your heart up at Miss Sweetley's house the other evening," said the gossip.

"Yes; and worse than that," replied the practical lover, "I lost my umbrella. I suspect one of those brothers of hers."

The Mosaic Flooring of the Desert.

The northern portion of the Colorado desert is paved with the most wonderful pebbles in the world, in many parts so exquisitely laid as to defy successful imitation by the most skilled worker in mosaic flooring. These pebbles are made of porphyry, agates, carnelian, quartz, crystals, garnets, chrysolite and other such beautiful materials. They are packed together so that the surface composed of them is like a floor, and they look as if pressed into it with a roller. As a rule, they are of nearly uniform size, and each one is polished brilliantly, as if oiled and rubbed. Most of them are perfect spheres, and the reflection from them of the sun's rays is gorgeous beyond description. Each convex surface gives back a ray of light, and the ground for miles seems as if literally paved with gems. Thus the whole surface of the plain is a combination of myriads of reflectors, each pebble being so highly polished that it is like a mirror, and it is believed that the lakes of the desert mirage are produced by this means. The pebbles are polished by the loose sand which is blown hither and thither

Awful Fate of Inartistic Cutters.

Bad tailoring, like sin, makes men uncomfortable and unhappy, but good tailoring, like good actions, makes them feel at ease and glad they are living.

The cutter of men's clothes should therefore always bear in mind the fact that he is a powerful influence in the world for good if he does good work, but for evil if his work is bad, and should keenly feel that he deserves honor for the one and disgrace for the other. If his work is bad his punishment, even though it may not fit the crime and make him utterly wretched, will surely so fill his days with shame, apprehension, shudders of horror, snubs and insults that he will almost hate himself and will wish in every waking hour that night will come and bring him forgetfulness and always through the night will long for day to escape in its light and bustle the black torments and silent gnawings of a guilty conscience.—Tailor and Cutter.

Cutting a Queen Bee's Wing.

Dallas Lore Sharp describes a method of preventing bees from swarming in the Country Calendar Keep your queens clipped. Lay aside your sentiments, your fears of the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, your ideas that it hurts her, your fears of killing her—and get your scissors. Seize her by one wing (if you can't do better) and, holding her gently against the frame, snip off one wing. This won't stop the swarming, but it will keep the bees from absconding, for the swarm won't go off without the queen while you are away. So you are often able to induce them to call off the strike and go back to work. Clip your queens then, give the bees room, give them shade at the hottest hours if necessary, shake them if they show signs of swarming and keep the colonies strong.

The Pictures of Paul Jones.

"Paul Jones," says a writer, "was portrayed in every costume that a pirate could be expected to masquerade in, and his whiskers were of the longest, blackest and curliest. He is portrayed in all degrees, from the sardonic gentleman cutthroat to the blood and wounds Bill Bowline type of tar, but always with as much sofa pillow stuffing as possible. One portrait presents him in a neat militia uniform, something like that of the time of the Mexican war and with the pattern of whiskers afterward known to fame as 'Burnsides.' There seems to be one point of accuracy in all these pictures if they are of the three-quarters or full length. Jones is always represented with a girdle full of pistols, a habit of dress to which he was accustomed."

Training a Cow.

T. P.'s London Weekly relates how Major Miles Malony of Ballyduff was amazed one morning to see from his bedroom window a little lad driving a cow back and forward again and again over a ditch and through a fence on his land. Hurriedly completing his toilet, he rushed out to question the little trespasser. "What are ye after with that cow? Is it to kill the beast ye want?" "Kill her! Shure, it's to keep her alive I want." "Keep her alive?" "Shure, it's taching her to get her own living I am. There isn't a ditch or fince in the barony that'll hold her in afther I've done wid her." Then the major understood. The cow, in fact, was being taught to trespass in search of her own living.

CHIFFON AND HOMESPUN

By FANNIE HEASLIP LEA

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

Janet came out of the long red farmhouse and paused briefly at the steps, buttoning her dogskin gloves. The keen, bright cold of the November morning brought the blood to her cheeks and an awakening sparkle to her cool gray eyes. She fastened the gloves with a final tug and ran down the path to where a man and two horses stood, just beyond the gate.

He helped her mount with no word beyond a brief "Ready" and an approving smile, then swung himself into the saddle and followed her over the crest of the hill on which the red farmhouse stood.

"You lead the way," he called after her. "I am a stranger in a strange land."

"This way," said Janet. "I want you to see the view from Brierson's hill. It's about the best in this part of the country, I think."

"Better than this?" asked the man audaciously, his eyes on her clear cut profile.

"The background is better," said Janet coolly.

The mountains rose blue and misty in the distance as they rode on. Around them the red of the sumac blazed wildly, and on the sloping sides of the foothills through which they passed great gashes in the red clay suggested, strangely, open wounds.

"It's a fine country," said Burke, with conscious banality.

Janet flung him a look that startled him, it was so far outside her usual cool self mastery.

"It's God's country," she said exultantly. "Oh, I could ride forever! See the haze, like smoke, on those mountains and the leaves afire on the hills. There's a rabbit. See him jump across the road. And look—yonder's an aster. I thought its time was over. Isn't that wind good on your face? Oh, I love it all, every bit of it!"

"I see you do," said Burke slowly.

"Well, why shouldn't I?" she demanded. "Doesn't it make you feel your life? I've a different soul up here."

"I see you have," said the man. "I'm trying to fit that soul to the Janet I know in town, the Janet who sat for my 'Lady In Gray,' the Janet of trailing chiffons and pink teas and Ibsen matinees. Why, you've a different look in your eyes now. You're warmer, less aloof, less certain of yourself. What is it?"

"Don't," said the girl, with a protesting smile. "I won't be dissected. I asked you down to spend Thanksgiving with me—not to cut up my soul with your little hatchet."

"And I came to spend Thangsgiving with you," retorted Burke, "not with a strange woman who has your eyes and your hair and your face—you that I know. How did you happen to leave here?" he asked, with the unembarrassed frankness of intimacy.

"I don't know," said Janet doubtfully. "It just happened. Aunt Jane took a fancy to me while I was off at college, and when I graduated she offered to bring me out in town. Mother never objected to anything I wanted, and—well, I was dazzled with the idea of town—society, dances, men. Any girl would be, so I went to Aunt Jane," she finished. "You have the sweet, sad story of my life now, bar a few details."

"Men?" asked Burke.

"Look out for that bridge; it's bad. Yes—men," said Janet.

"Of whom I am one," he finished.

She nodded inscrutably.

"Well, I don't want to be one," he protested, "unless you preface it with 'the' in italics."

"Don't you?"

"No," he repeated firmly, "I don't. See here, Janet—how long have I known you?"

"A year and a half," said the girl reflectively.

"And in the course of that time I have twice asked you to marry me, haven't I?"

"I seem to remember something of the sort," she answered, with a flickering smile that somehow sheathed the sneer.

"Didn't you know when you asked me here that I'd do it again? Didn't you know that I couldn't see you in a new phase and not lose my grip on myself? Ah, Janet, you must have known, and if you, knowing, let me come it must have been because you meant to say"— He broke off and struck savagely with his whip at the leaves above his head.

"Meant to say what," suggested the girl whimsically—"the word that would hobble my life forever, that would narrow my horizon and weed out my existence to one thought, one aim, one end? Is that what I meant to say?"

"If you like to put it so, that is it," said the man sullenly. "You know the truth is"—

They rode in silence for a little while.

"I could make you happy," said the man at last.

"Could you, Alec? I'm not so sure of that" Janet pushed an escaping hairpin back and after a moment faced him proudly. "I'm not playing fair with you," she said. "I did know you'd ask me this again, and I made up my mind I'd"— A shabby buggy creaked past them. In their absorption they had ridden upon it without knowing. Janet nodded a bright "Good morning!" to the country people within.

"Well," said Burke confidently when they had passed. "There was an exultant look in his eyes, and he bent to lay his hand on hers where it held the reins.

Janet swerved suddenly. "Take care," she said hurriedly, "we've ridden into the returning congregation of Brierson's church.

Burke followed her with an unuttered imprecation.

"What are they having church on a week day for, anyhow?" he demanded aggrievedly.

"Thanksgiving day," said Janet, bowing to a gray bearded man on horseback and flinging a smile to the sturdy urchin beside him. They walked their horses slowly through the tide of horses and vehicles, then drew rein before the little wooden church with its stunted steeple and weather beaten sides.

"They call it Brierson's, because the old man built it," said Janet in the tone of an obliging guide.

"Oh, bother the church," said Burke impatiently. "We're past the crowd now. Don't fool me any longer, Janet. Why, Janet"— He broke off, his gaze following hers to where the door of the little church opened and closed behind a tall man in the rough clothes of the country minister.

Janet's eyes widened, and her cheeks lost their fresh color as the young man, pocketing the church key, came quickly down the path. When he was opposite the pair on horseback he glanced up in frank curiosity, meeting the vivid question of Janet's eyes, and stopped short, paling under all his tan.

"Janet," he said hoarsely, and that was all.

Slowly the color crept back over Janet's face, and her eyelids fell before the minister's compelling look.

Burke's glance went from one to the other, and Janet felt its keenness.

"David," she stammered, "I didn't know that you were here. I hadn't thought"—

"I've been here for a year now." The minister's eyes were fastened upon her face with the bliss of long starvation ended. "They told me you never came home; that you had forgotten us for the city." The glory in his face smote Burke like a physical pain, and he jerked his horse's rein till the creature reared.

"Oh, I beg your pardon!" cried Janet, striving for mastery of the situation. "Mr. Burke, this is David MacAllen, an old friend."

The two men clasped hands in silent hostility on Burke's part and happy abstraction on MacAllen's. He had no eyes save for Janet.

"You've come back to stay," he insisted, laying a firm hand on her bridle rein.

"I think not," murmured Janet. "I don't know." She was visibly distressed.

"We'll convince you," laughed the minister like a happy boy.

Somehow Burke felt old and worn beside his fresh enthusiasm, and the sight of Janet's trembling uncertainty cut him sharply.

"I'll see you tonight," said MacAllen.

They rode on after a little, Janet and Burke, to the red farmhouse and left the minister standing in the road behind them, the glory of love's ages in his eyes.

"It was an old story, then?" said Burke as he lifted Janet from her horse at last.

"I knew him before I ever went to Aunt Jane," said the girl unhappily. "I thought I had forgotten—honestly."

Burke followed her into the house with a philosophic smile curving his lips, albeit a little bitterly. "Many waters cannot quench love nor much chiffon smother it," he said sententiously, but the sheen of the sunlight was as dust in his sight, and the hand that selected a cigarette with ostentatious care trembled strangely.

The Mistletoe.

Many conflicting tales have been told about the mistletoe—how it came to be one of Cupid's strongest cards. In the old Norse mythology curses were heaped upon the unlucky plant because it had been the innocent instrument of the death of Baldur the Beautiful, who was beloved by all the gods except Loki, the mischief maker, who naturally was envious enough to connive at ways to put Baldur out of the way.

But while the sorrowing gods were heaping curses upon the plant the goddess of love stopped them and, catching up the very plant which had slain Baldur, exhorted them all in memory of the bright, beautiful, gentle god to greet each other whenever they saw it with a kiss.

"Baldur is dead, indeed," she said, "but Baldur's spirit lives, and that spirit is love. Let us use the very thing that killed him as a symbol of love."

She hung the branch up, and one by one the angry gods passed out, hushing their sorrow at his death.

The Boy on the Farm.

The boy on the farm should receive encouragement. His is a hard job. There is nothing under the sun, moon or stars that he is not expected to do from currying the horses before sunup to milking the cows after sundown. If he is of school age he escapes some of the jar of farm work, but generally finds a pretty good allowance awaiting him when he comes home. In this day of scarce farm help it is a blessing to a farmer to have a boy, or several boys, for that matter, who can help. It is still more of a blessing to have a boy who does his tasks cheerfully and well. There is not much in this long houred apprenticeship except board and clothes, and so every father should give his son encouragement. Give him some of the farm animals which he can call his own. Let him raise some stock and feed them on his own account. He will consider he is amply repaid then for all the work he does. If this plan were followed there would be fewer boys wanting to come to town.—Pittsburg Press.

Couldn't Lift Ten Pounds.

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought Strength and Health to the Sufferer, Making Him Feel Twenty-Five Years Younger.

Sick kidneys cause a weak, lame or aching back, and a weak back makes a weak man. Can't be well and strong until the kidneys are cured. Treat them with Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's the testimony of one man cured.

J. B. CORTON.

J. B. Corton, farmer and lumberman, of Deppe, N. C., says "I suffered for years with my back. It was so bad that I could not walk any distance nor even ride in easy buggy. I do not believe I could have raised ten pounds of weight from the ground, the pain was so severe. This was my condition when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They quickly relieved me and now I am never troubled as I was. My back is strong and I can walk or ride a long distance and feel just as strong as I did twenty-five years ago. I think so much of Doan's Kidney Pills that I have given a supply of the remedy to some of my neighbors and they have also found good results. If you can sift anything from this rambling note that will be of any service to you, or to any one suffering from kidney trouble, you are at liberty to do so."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Corton will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Sold by all dealers; price, fifty cents per box.

NEWSPAPERARCHIVE®

The Unknown

[Original.]

I was sitting one evening in the parquet of a theater in New York when I noticed a young lady in a box in the second tier looking at me. When I fixed my eyes upon her she turned hers away, but when a few minutes later I looked at her again I saw that she was regarding me through a lorgnette. She lowered her glass and turned away with a look which indicated either repulsion, disappointment or pain. It might have been any of these, but I could not tell which.

My curiosity was at once aroused. I did not remember to have ever seen the lady before and certainly had no knowledge of having injured her. Before the close of the last act I left the theater and stood on the sidewalk waiting for her to come out. She did so in company with an elderly gentleman and lady. As soon as they entered their carriage I went across the street where mine stood ready and entering told the driver to follow. The party alighted at a house on Madison avenue, the number of which I noted, then drove away thinking of some plan to solve the mystery. Before reaching home I had resolved to write a note to the lady and send it next day. This is what I wrote:

Mr. Royal Pritchard presents his compliments to the young lady he saw at the —— theater last evening and who gave evidence that in some way her antagonism had been excited against him. As he does not remember ever having seen her before, he begs an explanation. If he has been mistaken in his inference, he apologizes for addressing her.

I sent the note by a messenger who on returning said that he had been told if there was any reply it would be sent later. I waited three days and was about to give up all hope of receiving any word when a note came which read as follows:

Since Mr. Pritchard has entirely forgotten the lady he saw at the theater, he need not give himself any concern with regard to her.

It is needless to say that I read these few words with astonishment. It was plain to me that I had been mistaken for some one else. However, I did not care to have the error uncorrected and wrote again, stating that there must be some misapprehension as to my identity and begging permission to call and clear up the matter. To this I received a reply that the name I had given in my notes was the same as that of the person I was supposed to be; therefore there could not possibly be any mistake. The lady did not care to renew the acquaintance of one who had paid her the highest compliment man could pay to woman and then forgotten that he had ever met her.

I began to feel that I must have passed through some illness or met with some accident that had impaired my memory. I asked several persons who had seen me nearly every day for years if this was the case and got laughed at for my pains. I confided my correspondence to my sister, but all the sympathy I got from her was, "That's just like a man for all the world."

I was about to write one more note inquiring for the lady's name, but my sister, who knew the tricks and manners of the sex, told me the girl was teasing me and would give me no satisfaction; that if I wanted to clear up the matter I had better call and call again and again till I had seen and talked with my tormentor.

Had the girl been unattractive I might have dropped the matter. On the contrary, her image—that of a girl with a face denoting character as well as being pretty—seemed to grow upon me, and I was literally being teased into a condition bordering on the tender passion. Summoning all my courage, I called upon the girl and sent up my card. An answer came that the young lady was not at home. This might mean that she was not at home to me or that she was really out. I called twice more on her, and each time received some message that put me off without being a positive refusal. Finally, on my third call, she came into the room and stood regarding me with what she intended to be a haughty stare. Nevertheless I fancied I could see a sparkle in her eye.

"I beg of you," I said, "cease this torment, which has become unbearable. If, as you say, I have known and forgotten you it must be through some physical defect on my part, for in health I am sure I could never forget having once seen you."

"Did you not once live in R.?" she asked.

"Yes; when a boy."

"And go to the high school there?"

"Yes."

"And did you not carry books for Dolly Farleigh, a little girl eight years your junior?"

"You don't mean"—

"And didn't you"—

"Tell her that when we were grown she should be my little wife? Yes, I did, and I am ready to keep my word."

She sank on a sofa with a delighted chuckle, and I sat down beside her.

When she saw me at the theater she at once suspected who I was and was about to hazard a bow when she perceived that I did not recognize her. She turned away, remembering that she had been staring at a man who might, after all, be a stranger to her. It was the look that accompanied this realization that I had interpreted as something more serious. All doubt of my identity had only been removed at the receipt of the note giving my name.

I atoned for my imperfect memory by a lifetime of devotion.

EDWARD B. LINCOLN.

A Drink Made Null and Void.

The Sunset Magazine tells a story of the rehabilitation of the character of Johnson Sides, a noted Indian temperance orator of bygone days: One day he was caught in the act of drinking a glass of whisky and was fined. Neither Indians nor whites would listen then to his temperance speeches. Poor Johnson was in despair. One day, however, he had an inspiration. He asked Senator Doolin of the Nevada legislature to absolve his sin by act of legislature. Senator Doolin was agreeable, and introduced and carried through "Senate Joint Concurrent Resolution No. 11," which is as follows: "Resolved, By the senate, the people of the state of Nevada concurring, that the drink of whisky taken by Johnson Sides on the 17th day of September in the city of Virginia, county of Story, be and is hereby declared null and void." Thus was Johnson Sides made a good man again. He became at once a power among his own people, resumed his advocacy of the cause of water and was listened to with great respect. —Cleveland Leader.

What a Diplomat Is.

The London Pall Mall Gazette discusses the word "diplomatist," interpreting it as "one with a double duty and a double responsibility"—to his own country and the country that receives him. The evolution of "diplomatist" from the Greek verb for "to double" is very curious. "Diploma," a doubling, was specialized as a folded paper and particularly in Roman times an official passport or license. Thus "diplomatic science" down to the end of the eighteenth century meant the science of manuscripts and documents, which explains a modern writer's strange remark that "there is not a shadow of diplomatic doubt thrown over the integrity of the third gospel." Dr Murray's Dictionary assigns the translation to the modern meaning to Leibnitz's "Codex Juris Gentium Diplomaticus" (documentary code of international law) and the title of a similar French work. "Diplomatic" came to be considered as meaning "international documentary," and then the "documentary" dropped out.

A DELICIOUS FAMILY BEVERAGE

Won't you believe with us that pure beer is entitled to just as important a place on the home table as bread and butter? We honestly think so and frankly, would like to have you of the same opinion.

The careful and special brewing of Monessen Brewery Beer is doing much to popularize the moderate use of pure beer as a beverage.

The very chasteness and clarity of this beer bespeaks the purity of its composition and the selection of choicest materials used in its brewing.

Its delicious cooling taste betokens the absolutely beneficial effect it has on the organs of digestion.

Get pure beer for home and table use—get Monessen Brewery Beer. It is always pure.

When you order a case sent home, ask your dealer for the brewery bottling.

Hygienically brewed by

The Independent Brewing Co. of Pittsburgh.
